

We are proud of you, Gauchos!

As we enter the latter half of spring quarter, we at EOP want to take the time to reaffirm our commitment to our students. This academic year, being a fully virtual experience, has not been easy, and we understand the level of drive and effort it takes to do well. To those that need to hear it, we are proud of you for making it this far! You are doing so well despite it all. Our counselors, peer mentors, and campus partner counselors are all available for scheduled appointments at the links below, alongside our expanded Qless hours for those who want a drop-in experience. We will continue to host events and informational sessions to support our students in their time here at UCSB.

Check for our most up-to-date Qless Hours here!

Cultivating Community Care: Exploring Our Relationship to Safety Within the Asian Community

Tues, May 18, 5-6:30pm
Zoom ID: 123 456 7890

In light of recent conversations about Asian American identity and the rise in anti-Asian hate crimes, it is important now more than ever to explore our relationship to words like "protection", "safety", and "community". Specifically, we will explore what it means to "protect our elders" or "protect our community" with the intent of cultivating community care. Join the creators of "Don't Say Sorry" Podcast Jayda and Haylee as they facilitate this honest conversation about our relationship to safety. Participants will also walk away with an emotional safety tool kit that is created through methods of self and community care.

Summer Institute in Mathematics & Science (SIMS)

The Summer Institute in Mathematics and Science (SIMS) is a 3-week academic preparation and research training program for incoming first-year students intending to enroll at UCSB directly from high school hosted by the California NanoSystems Institute.

Students will complete research modules led by UCSB researchers and engage in academic and professional development. SIMS gives students the opportunity to build the network and skills they need to excel at UCSB and compete for undergraduate research and industry opportunities early in their college careers. SIMS will provide the technology needed to actively participate in all program activities. There is no cost to be in the program.
